Helen Chapman is a widely experienced and bestselling children's author, with over 100 published Australian, English, American and New Zealand titles to her credit. She writes in all genres across a broad range of topics, both fiction and nonfiction, and specialises in educational books for children. Her use of humour engages her readers and makes her children's books highly effective.

Her latest book, Deadly Waters, is written in her favourite genre—historical narrative fiction. Helen, her brother Don and sister Carolyn grew up hearing their dad tell funny stories and anecdotes about his experiences in the Royal Australian Navy, but they had no idea of the reality of war and the horrors he and thousands of others experienced. While many books for children and young adults have been written about the Australian military, very few focus on the navy. This historical fiction adventure is presented with humour and insight into her dad's action-packed story about the life of a young seaman in the navy.
