SECRET SPY

CLOSER LOOK ON LOOP
I love reading. I always have. Even before I could actually read, I would get lost for hours in the drawings that came with my favourite stories. Talented illustrator/authors like Maurice Sendak, Dr. Seuss, Dorothy Wall and Graeme Base would grab my attention with their incredible artwork that would pull me in to discover more about the story these images had breathed life into.

It ignited my imagination and creativity and inspired the rest of my life. I’ve never looked back.

There is nothing like a good book to widen your perspective of what the world could be. Suddenly a wardrobe becomes a potential portal to another world, opening a chocolate bar has the ability for you to win the factory that made it, even running through a wall at a train station platform could get you to wizarding school – although I recommend leaving that one to the experts.

As I’ve grown I now appreciate the many special magic moments that come from reading with my daughter. Sharing tales of rabbits who love red footwear, monsters who are scared of mice and that pug with the enormous ego have been a true joy that only books can give you. Especially when it can even mean sharing some of the titles I grew up with too.

Now that I enter the ranks of children’s author and illustrator myself, it’s an amazing thought to realise that I will get to share my stories of Disgusting McGrossface and Rocky Lobstar with her, but even more amazing to think that they too could maybe be the inspiration for a generation to come.
